

Navigating the New Workplace Landscape

The impact of COVID-19 has brought monumental changes to the workplace. Employers can't afford to get lost in the new landscape of post-coronavirus employee communication and engagement. Here are the essentials your business needs to maintain clear communication and employee health and safety regardless if they're in the office, performing their duties on a factory floor, traveling on the road or working remotely at home.

In-office employees need:

- Targeted emergency and non-emergency alerts delivered via their preferred communication channel
- Ability to easily report their current health status prior to entering the workplace
- Instant access to important documents, including updated safety policies, resources and more

Employees in manufacturing environments need:

- Targeted emergency and non-emergency alerts via their preferred communication channel
- Automated schedule updates and the ability to fill open shifts instantly
- Ability to easily report their current health status prior to entering the workplace

Remote employees need:

- Two-way communication that enables employees to quickly respond to wellness checks and confidentially report health and safety concerns
- Consistent status updates on critical workplace topics like office reopenings to help them feel connected
- Instant access to important documents, including updated safety policies, resources and more

Traveling employees need:

- Virtual escorts to ensure they safely arrive at their destinations
- Two-way communication that allows workers to call for help and employers to check in
- Ability to receive important alerts and updates based on their location
- Instant access to important documents, including updated safety policies, resources and more
